Old Pueblo Archaeology Center presents:

Catalina Highway Prison Camp at the Gordon Hirabayashi Recreation Area Tour

With Archaeologist Bill Gillespie

Saturday November 21, 2020
9 a.m.-1 p.m.
Tour meets at Safeway store parking lot, 9125 E. Tanque Verde Rd., Tucson (at Catalina Highway intersection)

A unique archaeological site in the Santa Catalina Mountains is the location of a federal prison camp occupied in the mid-20th century. The facility was established for one specific purpose: to provide labor for construction of the Catalina or Hitchcock Highway connecting Tucson to Mount Lemmon. Although the project started in 1933, it wasn’t until 1939, when road construction had reached the 7-mile mark, that prisoners were moved from their temporary camp at the base of the mountain to the permanent one at a relatively flat valley setting adjacent to Soldier Creek and the highway. (This appealing location was used by the Hohokam at a much earlier time, as marked by petroglyphs, grinding features, and artifacts.) From 1933 to 1951 some 8,000 prisoners worked on the highway project, often with more than 200 in the camp at any time.

Use of the detention facility ceased in the early 1970s, all of the barracks, offices, residences, and other buildings were razed, and the Coronado National Forest adapted the site to a campground/picnic area. In 1999, the Forest Service named the site the Gordon Hirabayashi Recreation Area in honor of the Japanese-American civil rights leader. Hirabayashi was imprisoned at the site for a short time during World War II after the Supreme Court ruled against him in his case challenging the constitutionality of the relocation order that directed West Coast Japanese-Americans to report to a series of internment camps. In the 1980s his case was reopened and his conviction voided, leading to President Reagan signing the Civil Liberties Act of 1988 acknowledging the injustice of the internment program.

We’ll tour different parts of the camp and finish by lunchtime. Participants provide their own transportation, lunch, and water.

Tour Guide Bill Gillespie did archaeological fieldwork at Mesa Verde, Chaco Canyon, and in Jordan before moving to southern Arizona in the mid-1980s. He worked as an archaeologist for the Coronado National Forest for 25 years before recently retiring.
