Explore the American Southwest's Mogollon archaeological culture. In 14 abundantly illustrated two-hour sessions, archaeologist Allen Dart gives an up-to-date review of the Mogollon for anyone interested in Southwest archaeology. The class covers the history of Mogollon archaeology, Mogollon origins, the subregional Mogollon branches, changes in habitation, subsistence, and settlement patterns over time, artifacts, rock art, religious and social organization, depopulation and movement, and descendant peoples.

The class can be taken for Arizona Archaeological Society (AAS) Certification. The AAS recommends the Archaeology of the Southwest class as a prerequisite but this is negotiable with the instructor. To qualify for certification the student must prepare a brief research report on some aspect of Mogollon culture.

See AAS Certification program information below.

The Arizona Archaeological Society (AAS) Training, Certification and Education Program (TCEP) is designed with help from professional archaeologists to give training in various aspects of archaeology outside of an academic degree program. Because many of the program's courses provide field experience in addition to classroom training, students can develop those skills to become qualified and valuable members of archaeological projects. For students who join the Certification program, the AAS keeps records of courses taken and issues certificates upon successful completion of course requirements.

The AAS is a separate organization from Old Pueblo Archaeology Center. To enroll in the AAS Certification program one must be a paid member of the AAS, complete its Certification Program Application form, and pay the AAS a one-time fee of $10. When the application is accepted the Department Recorder will establish a file in the individual's name to maintain a permanent record of qualifications. When a course is completed the applicant will receive a certificate for the instructor to sign, and the individual becomes certified in that course's aspect of archaeology.

AAS members and nonmembers may take Old Pueblo Archaeology Center's courses without joining the TCEP.
